

Once a fox was out
searching for food.
He was very hungry.

He came upon a vineyard full of grapes.
They looked very tasty.
His mouth watered.

He jumped up to the nearest
bunch of grapes that was hanging down.
He could not reach them.

He came upon a vineyard full of grapes.
They looked very tasty.
His mouth watered.

He jumped up to the nearest bunch of grapes that was hanging down. He could not reach them.

He tried and tried, and soon got tired but could not reach the grapes. Sadly, he walked away saying to himself, "Anyway, the grapes were sour."

Moral: It's okay to want things, but we should be happy with what we have.

He tried and tried, and soon got tired but could not reach the grapes. Sadly, he walked away saying to himself, "Anyway, the grapes were sour."